

Timmy French - Primary Election Data and Insights

Virginia law does not allow voters to register by party. We also have "Open Primaries", meaning any voter may vote in any State-run Primary, unless both parties are holding primaries in the same location, in which case the voter must choose between voting a Republican or Democrat ballot.

Republican Party officials can get around this to protect our primaries by holding a "Party-run Process", instead of turning the responsibility over to the state. This Party-run process could be a Convention, Mass Meeting, or Party Canvass, with voters who have voted in recent Democratic Primaries denied a vote unless they sign a pledge to support the Republican nominee in the ensuing General Election. The Senate District 1 Republican chairmen originally planned a Party-run Process when they met on Dec. 11, 2022 and January 2, 2023, but on January 30, 2023, they abruptly changed their plan to turn the election over to the state. Three days later, on February 3, Timmy French filed paperwork to run in the state-run primary. Some local party activists challenged the legitimacy of the process, but their appeal was rejected by the 6th District Republican Committee, which is chaired by SD-1 candidate John Massoud.

Campaign data providers add insights on the political affinity of registered voters, using a scale of 0-100, with 0 being radical leftists, and 100 being solid conservatives. Campaigns are able to see daily updates on who has voted in early and absentee voting. During the 45-day early and absentee voting period, it became obvious that

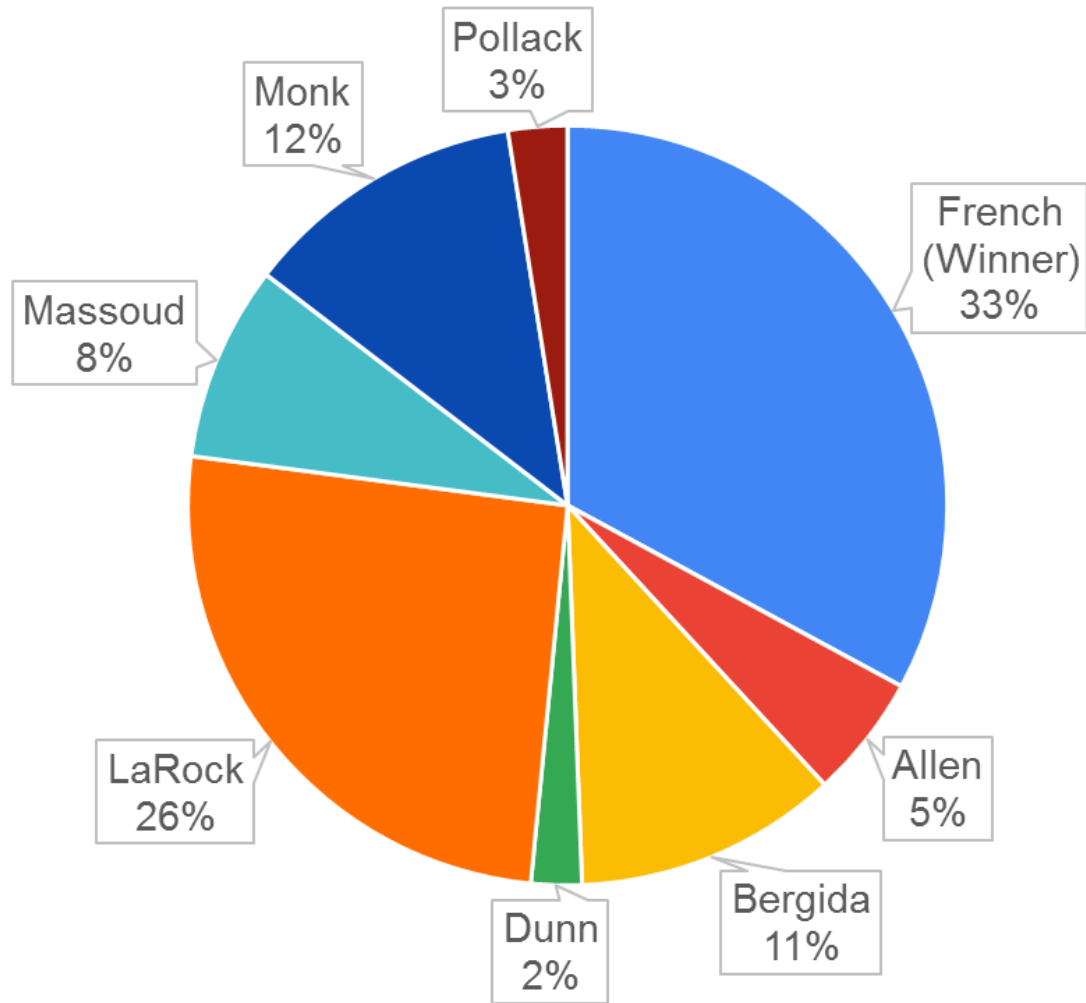

1. turnout was higher in Shenandoah County than in the rest of Senate District 1
2. lots of Democrats were voting (12% of early/absentee voters)

During early and absentee voting, Democrat Party leadership in Shenandoah, Frederick and Winchester encouraged their people to vote for Timmy French, and radical anti-family activists did as well. I and 6 other candidates encouraged Republicans to vote, while Timmy French encouraged "everyone" to vote for him:
